

SAMPLE REPORT / EN

Marcel's next move

Where your strengths, values and the market meet, and the routes that follow from it.

cairn /kɛərn/ noun

a mound of rough stones used to mark a trail, route, or summit, guiding travelers by showing the way forward, especially where the path isn't otherwise clear.

What's inside

ABOUT YOU

 Executive Summary

 Your Approach

 Your Strengths

 Development Areas

 Career Values

CAREER SUGGESTIONS FOR YOU

1 Primary Career Match
Customer Service Trainer · Large (201-1000) / Corporate

2 Second Career Match
HR Advisor, Learning and Development · Large (201-1000) / Corporate

3 Third Career Match
Onboarding Specialist · Large (201-1000) / Corporate

 Runner-up Careers
3 alternatives

 Outside the Box
3 unconventional paths

 Dream Job Assessment
2 dream jobs

CHAPTER ONE

About you

Your working profile: how you operate, what you are good at, where the friction is, and what you actually value. Everything in the second half is built on this.

FROM YOUR REPORT

“ I need the candidate's actual assessment data (personality profile, strengths, development areas, career recommendations, and any chat feedback) to write this Executive Summary.

Executive Summary

Want to share this? Pick a different line and get a ready-made card at cairnly.io/dashboard

PERSONALITY RADAR

5 axes

How you actually work

Your operating profile across five dimensions, built from the assessment and pressure-tested by your coach.

For further details regarding this graph, consult your dashboard.

 OVERVIEW

Executive Summary

The short version of everything that follows: what your profile points to, which roles came out on top, and the first move worth making.

I need the candidate's actual assessment data (personality profile, strengths, development areas, career recommendations, and any chat feedback) to write this Executive Summary. Could you provide:

1. Approach & Values - their work style, motivators, leadership tendencies
2. Strengths - top capabilities identified
3. Development Areas - growth opportunities flagged
4. Career Recommendations - top matches with fit rationale, plus runner-up/outside-the-box options
5. User Feedback/Chat Notes - any strong reactions, disagreements, or preferences expressed during the assessment conversation

Once you share these details, I'll synthesize them into the four-section Executive Summary following the structure and rules above.

 ABOUT YOU

Understanding Your Approach

How you navigate challenges, lead teams and engage with the people around you, and what that means for the environments where you do your best work.

 Personality and Interaction Style

Marcel, your data shows a coach operating inside a manager's job description. You lead by drawing people out rather than pushing them, you seek compromise even at personal cost, and you'd rather approach a manager privately than raise concerns in the room. That last habit sits oddly next to "The Leader" as a self-described archetype: you direct through influence and care, not through visible authority or open confrontation.

 Impact in Different Environments

This pattern paid off hugely as a senior customer contact handler (8/10), where being the one who solved the hard cases and calmed the room let your gut-and-empathy style operate directly. As team leader, the same instincts now compete with reporting cycles and management expectations you can't fully control, which is exactly where your rating drops to 6/10.

 Key Insight

The gap between your two highest-rated roles and your current one isn't skill or seniority, it's proximity to the person you're actually trying to help. Once decisions and reports stand between you and the individual, your satisfaction drops regardless of title.

⚡ ABOUT YOU

Strengths and How to Grow Them

What sets you apart professionally, and how to put more weight on it.

✦ Identifying Your Core Strengths

Across four very different jobs, the throughline isn't customer service, it's diagnosing where a process breaks a person down and fixing that specific point. You cut onboarding time from ten weeks to six, raised team satisfaction by nearly a full point, and coached two people into senior roles. Each achievement targets friction at the human level, not the metric level.

↗ Leveraging Strengths in Your Career

Given your goal of finding work that fits your skills better, this diagnostic instinct is more transferable than your job titles suggest. It doesn't require a customer service label to matter; it requires access to people who are stuck and a mandate to fix the system around them, not just comfort them through it.

💡 Key Insight

Colleagues already come to you when they're deciding if the work still fits them, not just when they're stuck on a call. You're informally doing career and skills coaching inside a customer service role, which is worth naming directly instead of treating as a side effect of being a good manager.

↗ ABOUT YOU

Areas for Development

The areas where focused effort makes the biggest difference to the goals you named. Not weaknesses, but the things currently costing you the most.

✂ Understanding Potential Growth Areas

Taking on too much, delayed pushback in tense situations, and struggling to delegate trace back to one habit: absorbing tension so others do not have to carry it. Rather than avoiding conflict entirely, you often pick your moments carefully or delay your reaction, managing stress after the fact instead of setting a firm boundary up front.

➤ Implications for Your Growth

This pattern directly impacts your capacity, Marcel. Reducing your hours or meeting load is a clear goal, but part-time hours alone will not protect your energy if the tendency to over-commit persists. Without actively holding boundaries around what you take on, absorbing tension will simply refill a shorter workweek just as quickly.

💡 Key Insight

Delegation often stalls because handing tasks over risks friction if work returns off-target, prompting you to absorb the extra effort yourself. Building comfort with immediate boundary setting and earlier pushback will safeguard your time far more effectively than structural schedule changes alone.

💖 ABOUT YOU

Aligning with Your Values

What matters most to you in your work, and how that shapes which roles will actually fit rather than merely look good.

🎯 Identifying Your Core Values

Work-life balance and job satisfaction outrank autonomy for you, Marcel, alongside a clear preference to minimize frequent high-stakes decision authority. This forms a coherent picture: you value remaining deeply invested in supporting people while keeping exposure to pressurized, high-stakes calls manageable.

🏠 Values in Career Decisions

Your next role needs structure you didn't build alone, a coaching or developmental mandate, and a ceiling on strategic decision load. Crucially, specific work-life boundaries—such as your Wednesday at home while your children are in primary school—are non-negotiable baseline conditions rather than soft scheduling preferences. The right environment will also avoid constant urgency and layers of reporting between you and the people you support.

💡 Key Insight

You listed reaching a senior position and building recognition as long-term goals, but your highest happiness score, your dream job description, and your informal reputation all point toward depth and craft in developing people over climbing an organizational ladder. Recognition for you means being the person others trust with their doubts rather than holding an elevated title.

CHAPTER TWO

Career recommendations

Roles matched against the profile in chapter one. Your top three first, then close alternatives, then the unexpected directions and a reality check on your dream job.

FROM YOUR REPORT

“ Je krijgt de directe klantcases waar je energie van krijgt, zonder de managementsandwich die je nu vastzet tussen mensen en beleid.

Customer Service Trainer

Want to share this? Pick a different line and get a ready-made card at cairnly.io/dashboard

TOP THREE COMPARED

How your top three stack up

The same three roles measured against the working conditions you said matter most.

- 1. Customer Service Trainer
- - - 2. HR Advisor, Learning and Development
- - - 3. Onboarding Specialist

For further details regarding this graph, consult your dashboard.

 TOP MATCH · 01

Your strongest match, based on your personality, values and skills. What the work involves, why it fits, and what to be honest with yourself about.

Customer Service Trainer

Large (201-1000) / Corporate

 MATCH · 94%

 AI · MODERATE

 READY NOW

Overview

Designs and runs training programs that teach customer service reps how to handle calls, use systems, and deal with people well.

Why this role fits you

Work-life balance sits at the top of what you're chasing right now, and this role delivers it inside a structure you already know: standard corporate hours, no evening scrambles, easily fitted into your 32-hour ask. But the real win is what disappears. This role extends your 8/10 Senior Medewerker Klantcontact pattern (direct contact, solving the hard cases, coming home feeling like you mattered) while cutting the reporting load that drags your current Teamleider role down to 6/10.

You've already built the proof: rewriting onboarding from ten weeks to six, plus a formal Praktijkopleider certification. This role hands you the diagnostic work you're known for ("I know exactly where irritation builds up in a customer process") without the management sandwich you named as the problem: "klem tussen management en mensen."

What you'll actually do

- Run onboarding sessions. Directly builds on your proven redesign that cut inwerktijd from ten to six weeks.
- Build training materials and role-plays. Your Praktijkopleider certification and coaching background make this second nature.
- Coach struggling trainees one-on-one. This is the "making people better at their work" you said you loved most.
- Review real call recordings for coaching cues. Uses your de-escalation skills without putting you back on the phones full-time.

The Reality Check

-  Struggling trainees test your delegation instincts. Your growth area is avoiding confrontation, and coaching someone who isn't improving in a short onboarding window means having a direct conversation, not softening it into vague encouragement.
-  Content goes stale fast. Product and policy updates roll in constantly, and keeping curriculum current is a background task that competes with your delivery time.
-  High-volume intake cycles spike your load. New cohorts land unevenly, and your Steady Planner style will need real advance scheduling to avoid last-minute pressure during busy stretches.

The practical stuff

Money: €40,000 to €55,000 for full-time; pro-rated for your 32-hour target, this likely lands in the €35,000 to €49,000 range, a touch under your stated €50,000–€75,000 bracket, though often negotiable given your certification and track record. Salary is moderately important to you, and the work-life balance perks here largely offset the gap.

Schedule: Standard corporate hours with occasional shifts during onboarding cohorts. This fits your 32-hour, non-negotiable part-time requirement comfortably.

Energy: High colleague interaction, low external client contact. Matches your "somewhat energized, but I have a limit" profile well since it's internal-facing, not customer-facing all day.

Growth: Leads toward Senior Trainer, then Training & Quality Manager or L&D Manager, a track built on craft and depth rather than climbing into more line management.

How AI will impact this role

Moderate. AI will draft curriculum outlines, generate role-play scenarios, and handle basic performance scoring, but the facilitation, real-time behavioral coaching, and empathy that make you good at this stay entirely yours. Your "somewhat familiar" AI comfort level is enough to start using these tools for drafting, freeing you to spend more time actually coaching people.

Future-proof skills

- Get hands-on with AI content tools. Use them to draft training materials faster, then apply your judgment to what actually lands with trainees.
- Sharpen feedback delivery. Direct, structured coaching conversations become your differentiator as routine drafting gets automated.

Alignment with your ambitions

This directly serves your short-term goal of gaining experience in a role built around your real strengths, and it's a strong match for the "expertise and recognition" side of your long-term ambition. It's less a bridge and more a genuine destination: a role where craft and depth in developing people, not further title-climbing, is the actual point.

TOP MATCH · 02

Your second match. Close to the first in overall fit, but different in focus, environment or trajectory.

HR Advisor, Learning and Development

Large (201-1000) / Corporate

MATCH · 92%

AI · HIGH

UPSKILL

Overview

Builds and evaluates company-wide learning programs and capability frameworks, working with department leaders to close skill gaps across the organization.

Why this role fits you

Your current role runs at 6/10 because you're stuck between what management wants and what your team can handle, drowning in "rapportages en overleg." This role avoids the 6/10 Teamleider Klantenservice pattern by removing the line-management sandwich entirely, replacing it with a consultative mandate where you advise on learning strategy instead of managing headcount and KPIs.

It's a step up from Customer Service Trainer in scope, formalizing the informal coaching you already do ("collega's komen bij mij als ze vastlopen") into a proper internal development role. Your Praktijkopleider certification and Coachend Leidinggeven training give you direct credibility here, and the €47,000-€66,000 range sits comfortably inside your stated bracket.

What you'll actually do

- Assess learning needs across departments. Your diagnostic strength, spotting where a process breaks people down, scales here beyond one team.
- Design and facilitate leadership workshops. Draws on your coaching background and the "mensen beter maken" drive you named directly.
- Measure program impact with feedback data. Uses your process-improvement instincts, the same ones that cut onboarding time in half.
- Consult with department heads on skill gaps. Requires the stakeholder conversations you're building toward but haven't formally held yet.

The Reality Check

- ⚠ Budget negotiations require pushing back. You'll need to advocate for training investment against competing departmental priorities, and your instinct to "seek compromise to maintain harmony" could cost you ground here if you concede too early.
- ⚠ Stakeholder influence has no formal authority behind it. You're advising department heads, not managing them, and getting buy-in for long-term learning investment demands more assertiveness than your current people-leadership role requires.

⚠️ Reskilling gap is modest. You're moving from operational training to strategic L&D advisory; the core skills transfer, but formal learning needs analysis and ROI frameworks are new territory. A short course in instructional design (ADDIE/SAM) over 2-3 months, easily AI-assisted, closes this fast given your existing track record.

The practical stuff

Money: €47,000 to €66,000 for full-time. Pro-rated to 32 hours, this puts you around €42,000-€59,000, comfortably within your €50,000-€75,000 target at the top end, and negotiable given your certifications.

Schedule: Standard corporate hours with occasional early or late sessions for distributed cohorts. Fits your part-time requirement, though the odd off-hours session is worth confirming upfront.

Energy: High collaboration with department heads and HR partners, low external contact. Matches your social energy limit, work-focused with occasional social touchpoints.

Growth: Leads to L&D Manager, then Head of Talent Development or Strategic HR Business Partner, a genuine ladder if you want one later, without requiring it now.

How AI will impact this role

High. AI will generate first-draft content and personalize learning paths at scale, shifting your actual work toward strategic capability planning, cohort coaching, and the complex behavioral facilitation AI can't do. Given your "somewhat familiar" AI starting point, the first move is learning how these authoring tools work so you're directing them, not competing with them.

Future-proof skills

- Learn AI-assisted instructional design tools. Get fluent in one LMS/authoring platform with built-in AI features within your first few months.
- Build stakeholder influence without authority. Practice framing training ROI in business terms department heads act on.

Alignment with your ambitions

This is a strong match for your short-term goal of gaining experience in a different role, and it puts you squarely on the path toward "establishing expertise and recognition in my field," your stated long-term ambition. Given your stage at 41 with 18 years of customer operations experience, this reads as the natural next chapter rather than a detour, a credible bridge to genuine authority in L&D.

TOP MATCH · 03

Your third match, and the last of the top three. Worth reading even if the first two landed better, since it often isolates what you actually want.

Onboarding Specialist

Large (201-1000) / Corporate

MATCH · 90%

AI · MODERATE

READY NOW

Overview

Coordinates new employee onboarding journeys, from orientation sessions to 30-60-90 day check-ins, so new hires integrate quickly and feel supported from day one.

Why this role fits you

You named it yourself: "iets doen met het opleiden en begeleiden van mensen" is your dream job, and this role is close to a literal match. It's also the most direct extension of your single biggest proven achievement: rewriting the onboarding program that cut new-hire ramp time from ten weeks to six.

This role extends your 8/10 Senior Medewerker Klantcontact pattern, high proximity to people who need help, the exact feeling you described as "ik kwam thuis met het gevoel dat ik iets had betekend." It strips out the management-sandwich friction from your current 6/10 Teamleider role entirely, since there's no direct-report structure here, just cohort coordination and welcoming new people in. Your empathy and Praktijkopleider background carry the whole role.

What you'll actually do

- Facilitate orientation sessions for new hires. Directly reuses the onboarding redesign work you're already known for.
- Coordinate IT setup and compliance paperwork. Less exciting than coaching, but your organizational planning skills make this quick.
- Run 30-60-90 day check-ins. This is the ongoing human contact and follow-through your happiest role thrived on.
- Synthesize feedback data to refine the process. Matches your instinct for "waar in een klantproces de irritatie ontstaat."

The Reality Check

- ⚠ Ceiling is lower here than in the other two options. This role sits closer to coordination than coaching or strategy, and your dream job language points toward trainer or loopbaanbegeleider, roles with more depth than this one offers long-term.
- ⚠ Stakeholder delays aren't yours to fix. IT provisioning and hiring manager scheduling regularly slip, and you'll absorb the frustration of new hires waiting on other departments without authority to speed things up.

⚠ Administrative load competes with the human part. Document verification and compliance tracking is real time spent away from the coaching and welcoming work that energizes you most, though AI increasingly handles this layer.

📦 The practical stuff

Money: €36,000 to €49,000 full-time, or roughly €32,000-€44,000 pro-rated to 32 hours. This sits below your €50,000-€75,000 target bracket, a genuine gap, though the near-perfect day-to-day fit and work-life balance may offset it if pay isn't your top lever.

Schedule: Standard corporate hours structured around bi-weekly cohort intakes. Fits your 32-hour requirement cleanly, with predictable, plannable cycles that suit your Steady Planner style.

Energy: High colleague interaction, low external contact. Matches your social energy limit well, internal-facing and warm rather than externally demanding.

Growth: Leads to Talent Experience Lead or HR Generalist, then People Operations Manager, a path that drifts toward generalist HR rather than the specialized coaching/training depth you've said you want.

🤖 How AI will impact this role

Moderate. AI increasingly handles document verification and schedule automation, which shifts your actual time toward the human connection and culture transmission parts of the job, the parts that already energize you most. Given your basic AI familiarity, getting comfortable with HRIS automation features early will free up more of your day for the coaching conversations that matter to you.

🛡 Future-proof skills

- Get fluent in HRIS automation. Learn the self-service and workflow features so admin time shrinks and coaching time grows.
- Push toward coaching-heavy check-ins. Use 30-60-90 day reviews as a wedge to build toward the trainer role you actually want next.

🎯 Alignment with your ambitions

This satisfies your short-term goal of better work-life balance and a role change almost perfectly. But your long-term ambition is expertise and recognition in your field, and this role, while a genuine and immediate fit, reads more as a comfortable bridge than the destination. Treat it as a strong two-year platform toward Customer Service Trainer or L&D Advisor rather than where you settle at 41 with your track record.

CAREER MAP

Where the matches sit

Your roles plotted by match strength against AI-exposure risk. Sweet spot is top-left; bottom-right is the walk-away zone.

- 1 Customer Service Trainer
- 2 HR Advisor, Learning and Development
- 3 Onboarding Specialist
- 4 Learning and Development Specialist
- 5 Training Coordinator
- 6 Career Counselor

For further details regarding this graph, consult your dashboard.

🏆 RUNNER-UP CAREERS · 3 ROLES

Close alternatives to your top three. Also strong fits for your strengths and values, but differing in focus, work environment or trajectory. A comparison set rather than the creative picks.

Learning and Development Specialist

Medium (51-200) / Mid-Market

🔄 MATCH · 89%

🏠 AI · HIGH

📈 UPSKILL

👁 Overview

You design and run company-wide training programs — figuring out where employees' skills fall short, then building workshops and learning paths to close those gaps and boost performance.

🧩 Why this role fits you

Your proudest achievement — rewriting the onboarding program and cutting ramp-up time from ten to six weeks — is essentially this job. It scored just behind the Top 3 because it leans slightly more toward org-wide strategy and stakeholder buy-in than the 1-on-1 coaching you rate as most fulfilling (your 8/10 pattern).

👍 What works for you

- 👉 Direct extension of your best work. You've already redesigned onboarding and coached two people into senior roles. 📌 End-to-end ownership. Mid-market size means you own the strategy, not just a slice of it. 📌 Low burnout risk. Structured, project-based pace instead of constant firefighting.

⚠ The Reality Check

- ⚠ Requires ROI proof. You'll need to show measurable business impact for "soft" development programs — new muscle for someone avoiding high-accountability decisions. 📌 Stakeholder chasing. Securing time from busy department heads takes the confrontation you tend to sidestep. 📌 Certification helps, not required. A CPTD/APTD credential (3-6 months part-time, AI-assisted study) would strengthen your case given no formal L&D papers yet.

📁 The practical stuff

Money: €43,000 - €59,000 Schedule: Full-time standard, though part-time is negotiable in many mid-market L&D roles. Energy: High colleague interaction, low external contact — matches your "somewhat energized" profile.

🤖 How AI will impact this role

High — AI generates microlearning content and quizzes fast, but you'll shift focus to high-touch coaching and reading what training actually lands.

🛡 Future-proof skills

- AI-assisted content design: Get hands-on with AI authoring tools now so you direct content creation instead of building from scratch.

- ROI storytelling: Build a habit of pairing training outcomes with numbers — it's your strongest lever for buy-in.

Training Coordinator

Large (201-1000) / Nonprofit

 MATCH · 82%

 AI · MODERATE

 REFRAME

Overview

You handle the logistics behind training programs — scheduling sessions, managing the learning platform, coordinating with department heads, and tracking whether the training actually worked.

Why this role is ranked here

While the nonprofit setting aligns with your values, the day-to-day focus is heavily centered on logistics and coordination — the administrative organizing you want to step away from.

What works for you

- ✓ Nonprofit mission fit. Aligns with the same values driving your food bank volunteering.  Genuinely stable. Low burnout risk, predictable 32-hour scheduling — matches your non-negotiable.  Familiar skill set. Logistics, LMS admin, and reporting build directly on your current coordination strengths.

The Reality Check

- ⚠ Heavy on logistical coordination. As you noted, managing schedules, LMS platforms, and administrative organizing is precisely what you want to move away from.  Less direct coaching. Day-to-day work is lighter on the deep 1-on-1 development you find most meaningful.  Nonprofit budgets are tight. Delivering training with limited resources will test your dislike of high-pressure constraints.  A step down in scope. Moving from team leader to coordinator may feel like a title downgrade even though hours and stress drop.

The practical stuff

Money: €32,000 - €44,000 Schedule: Standard full-time, 32-hour arrangements common in nonprofit settings. Energy: High internal collaboration, low external client contact.

How AI will impact this role

Moderate — AI handles scheduling and content curation; you stay essential for cultural fit and stakeholder alignment.

Future-proof skills

- Program ownership: Push to own evaluation and reporting, not just logistics — it's your path back toward strategy.
- AI tool fluency: Start using AI for LMS reporting and scheduling automation to free time for higher-value coordination.

Career Counselor

Medium (51-200) / Public Sector / Gov

 MATCH · 80%

 AI · MODERATE

 UPSKILL

Overview

You sit one-on-one with people navigating career changes — assessing their skills, mapping options, and coaching them through resumes, interviews, and job search strategy.

Why this role fits you

This is your own stated dream job — you named "loopbaanbegeleider" directly, and colleagues already come to you when they're stuck or doubting their path. It ranks below Top 3 mainly because you flagged uncertainty about having the right credentials, and public-sector caseload pressure could clash with your dislike of high-volume, fast-paced work.

What works for you

- 🕒 It's literally your dream job. You named this exact role when asked what you'd love to do. 📌 Matches your natural strength. Colleagues say you listen well without rushing to solutions — core to this work. 📌 Pure 1-on-1 impact. No management reporting layer, the part draining you now.

The Reality Check

- ⚠️ Credential gap is real but bridgeable. A GCDF or CCC certification typically takes 3-6 months part-time; AI-assisted study tools can compress this further. 📌 Caseload quotas. Public-sector targets can create the fast pace and pressure you actively avoid. 📌 Career step sideways. Leaving a leadership role for an individual-contributor position is a real shift to weigh at 41 with 18 years of management experience.

The practical stuff

Money: €36,000 - €50,000 Schedule: Standard business hours with occasional evenings. Energy: High 1-on-1 client interaction, moderate internal collaboration.

How AI will impact this role

Moderate — AI automates resume screening and job matching; your empathetic, personalized guidance stays the core value.

Future-proof skills

- Get certified deliberately: Start a GCDF or CCC course now — it directly closes the one gap standing between you and your dream job.
- AI-assisted career matching: Learn the labor-market AI tools counselors use, so you lead with insight, not just conversation.

💡 OUTSIDE-THE-BOX CAREERS · 3 ROLES

Sometimes the best paths are not the obvious ones. These roles fit who you are but probably were not on your radar.

Food Service Program Manager (Nonprofit Feeding Operations)

Medium (51-200) / Nonprofit

AI · MODERATE

REFRAME

👁 Overview

You'd run the volunteer scheduling, kitchen operations, and program logistics for a food bank or meal-distribution nonprofit, coordinating volunteers, donors, and clients so the operation runs smoothly day to day. It's operational leadership with a direct line to people in need, not a step removed by reporting layers.

🧩 Why this might be a fit

You already volunteer at a food bank and cook for large groups, so you know this world firsthand rather than romanticizing it. More importantly, this pulls on your real diagnostic strength (fixing the point where a process breaks a person down) and applies it to volunteers and clients instead of customers, in a mission-driven setting with far less executive pressure and no KPI-driven urgency. It gives you visible, immediate impact on people who are stuck, which is exactly what energizes you, without the strategic accountability you're trying to shed.

Heads-up: nonprofit operations roles at this level often land at the lower end of your €50-75K target, sometimes below it depending on the organization's size.

📌 Path Type & Reality

Employee role. Expect a hiring process built around program funding cycles and grant-dependent budgets rather than corporate promotion tracks.

📊 AI Impact on this role

Moderate. AI can help with scheduling, inventory forecasting, and donor communications, but coordinating volunteers, reading room dynamics, and handling logistics on the ground stays firmly human.

Athlete Wellbeing and Support Manager

Small (11-50) / Nonprofit

 AI · MODERATE

 RETRAIN

Overview

You'd support amateur or semi-pro athletes (often at a running club, sports academy, or regional sports federation) with the non-athletic side of their development: managing transitions, burnout, workload balance, and connecting them to the right resources when performance pressure hits personal limits. This is a welfare and development role, distinct from coaching or athletic training.

Why this might be a fit

Running is a real personal interest, but this goes beyond personal enthusiasm into a genuine skills bridge: your talent for diagnosing where a system breaks a person down, honed in a high-pressure customer service environment, is unusually rare inside sports organizations that are typically strong on performance but weak on people infrastructure. You'd be the person athletes go to when they're deciding if the sport still fits them, which mirrors exactly what colleagues already seek you out for. It's a different sector, a different professional identity, and it caps out the high-stakes strategic decision-making you want less of.

Heads-up: pay in amateur/regional sports organizations tends to run below your target range; this is more likely a step down in compensation for a step up in fit.

Path Type & Reality

Employee role, typically part-time or hybrid at regional sports clubs or federations, which suits your 32-hour requirement well.

AI Impact on this role

Moderate. AI can flag workload or scheduling patterns, but building trust with athletes navigating burnout or identity shifts is a human relationship, not a task to automate.

Facilitator, Restorative Practices (Mediation)

Own Company / Solo Practice

 AI · MINIMAL

Overview

You'd facilitate structured conversations between conflicting parties (in schools, housing associations, or community organizations) helping people work through disputes without escalation to formal complaints or legal processes. This is process-driven, low-stakes-per-session facilitation, distinct from high-pressure commercial or legal mediation.

Why this might be a fit

Your instinct to absorb tension so others don't have to feel it usually costs you, but reframed as a professional skill, it's exactly what restorative facilitation needs: someone who seeks compromise, listens without judgment, and de-escalates rather than directs. This moves you fully out of corporate customer service into community and social infrastructure work, using your calming, non-confrontational style as the core deliverable rather than a personality trait you manage around. Sessions are structured and time-boxed, which protects you from the unpredictable workload patterns you are leaving behind.

Heads-up: freelance mediation and facilitation work begins with variable pay until a caseload builds, meaning this functions best when developed alongside a primary role.

Path Type & Reality

Freelance/fractional to start (contracted per case or per community organization), with potential to move to a part-time employee role at a mediation service or housing association once established. Breaking in requires formal grounding—while your de-escalation background provides a strong head start, you will need part-time certification (such as basic MfN-registered mediation or municipal buurtbemiddeling/restorative justice training, taking several months to a year). Given family financial priorities and your 32-hour target, building this gradually with a handful of cases per month alongside a stable primary role is the most realistic path.

AI Impact on this role

Minimal. Facilitating a live, emotionally charged conversation between disputing parties requires human presence, trust, and real-time judgment that AI cannot substitute for.

★ YOUR DREAM JOBS · 2 ROLES

You told us your dream job without worrying about constraints, and that was deliberate. Here we put the constraints back in: not to talk you out of it, but to show what getting there would really take, and what a version of it might look like that fits the experience you already have.

Career Counselor (Loopbaanbegeleider)

AI · MODERATE

UPSKILL

👁 Overview

Marcel, this dream makes total sense on paper: colleagues already come to you when they're stuck or doubting their path, and you say it yourself, "wat ik het liefste doe is mensen beter maken in hun werk." The question isn't whether you'd be good at this, it's whether the Dutch credentialing system will let you practice it the way you're picturing.

🔄 Feasibility Rating

Moderate: Your natural fit is excellent, but the field has real credentialing gates you don't currently hold, and your HBO Bedrijfskunde background doesn't clear them.

👤 Personality & Energy Fit

- Your "Somewhat Energized" social battery (2a) and harmony-seeking conflict style (2i) suit the one-on-one, low-confrontation nature of career counseling well; no team politics, no escalation firefighting.
- Your Somewhat Structured preference (2g) and Steady Planner habits (5f) match the scheduled, session-based rhythm of counseling work far better than the reactive chaos you're leaving behind.
- This role directly counters your Competence Trap: instead of being pulled into administrative oversight because you're competent at it, you'd be paid specifically for the empathetic listening skill you undervalue in yourself.

👑 The "Executive Version" Suggestion

- Rather than entry-level loopbaanbegeleider, aim for Senior Loopbaancoach / Outplacement Consultant at an established firm (like Randstad RiseSmart, AS|U, or a regional UWV-contracted provider), where your 18 years of people-management credibility becomes the selling point, not a footnote.
- This version solves the intellectual stimulus risk: entry-level counseling can be repetitive and undercompensated, but senior outplacement work pays closer to your €50-75K bracket and lets you specialize in corporate reorganization transitions, exactly the terrain you know from the inside.
- This tracks closely with "Career Counselor" appearing at rank 6 in your runner-up list, and echoes the L&D-adjacent roles that scored highest for you, confirming this instinct is well-founded, not a fantasy detour.

📣 Industry Outlook & Regional Trends

- In the Netherlands, registered loopbaanadviseurs (via NOLOC or similar bodies) typically earn €40,000-€60,000 in-house, with senior/outplacement specialists reaching €65,000+, especially through UWV-funded or corporate contracts.

- AI Impact: Moderate. AI tools now handle skills-mapping and job-market data crunching, freeing you to focus on the emotional and identity work of a career transition, the part that actually requires a human who can sit with someone's doubt.
- Demand is steady in Northern/Western Europe due to reorganizations and lifelong-learning policy pushes, but the market is crowded with freelancers; standing out requires either a corporate contract base or a specialization (e.g. mid-career transitions, customer service sector expertise).

🛡️ Future-proof skills

- Your diagnostic instinct, pinpointing exactly where a process or role breaks a person down, is the human judgment AI can't replicate; lean into that as your positioning, not just "good listener."
- Build basic fluency in AI-assisted career-matching tools (e.g. skills-taxonomy platforms) so you can use them as a diagnostic aid rather than be replaced by their output.

🔗 Steps for Pursuing This Role

- Shadow or volunteer with a loopbaanadviseur for a few sessions to pressure-test the reality against the fantasy before investing further.
- Credential reality: career counseling in the Netherlands is a semi-gated field. Formal registration (NOLOC or comparable) typically requires a post-HBO coaching/counseling certification; your HBO Bedrijfskunde doesn't grant this automatically, so a recognized loopbaanbegeleiding or coaching post-graduate certificate (6-12 months, part-time) is the concrete next step, not a full retrain.
- Bridge financially by staying in your current role while building a small side-practice or internal mobility-coaching pilot at your current employer, using your Praktijkopleider certification as your credibility anchor.

Trainer / Educator (Corporate Trainer)

AI · MODERATE

🔗 READY NOW

👁️ Overview

Marcel, this is the dream job that's actually closest to a job you could start next quarter, not next year. You already redesigned onboarding and cut ramp-up time by four weeks; you've been doing training work informally, this is just naming it and getting paid properly for it.

📈 Feasibility Rating

High: This isn't a stretch dream, it's a formalization of work you're already doing, backed by a certification you already hold.

🧑 Personality & Energy Fit

- Your Somewhat Energized social profile (2a) fits training perfectly: structured group sessions with clear start/end points, not open-ended social drain.
- Your Steady Planner style (5f) and preference for process-with-flexibility (2g) match curriculum design and workshop facilitation far better than the reactive, meeting-heavy chaos of your current line-management role.

- This role is the direct antidote to your Competence Trap: it moves you from being "the reliable manager who absorbs everyone's admin overflow" to "the specialist paid to develop others," which is where your energy actually replenishes.

The "Executive Version" Suggestion

- Aim for Senior Corporate Trainer / L&D Program Owner or Learning & Development Manager, where you own curriculum design and measurable outcomes (like your CSAT jump from 7.1 to 8.0) rather than just delivering pre-built sessions.
- This solves the low-stimulus risk of generic "trainer" roles: at senior level you're diagnosing organizational skill gaps and designing the fix, which uses your strategic pattern-recognition, not just your presentation skills.
- This exact profile appeared as your #1 ranked career (Customer Service Trainer, 94% compatibility) and #2 (HR Advisor, L&D, 92%), so this isn't speculative, it's your best-validated path forward.

Industry Outlook & Regional Trends

- Corporate trainers/L&D specialists in the Netherlands and broader Western Europe typically earn €45,000-€65,000, with senior L&D roles at large organizations reaching €65,000-€75,000, aligning well with your target bracket.
- AI Impact: Moderate. AI is already generating training content drafts and quizzes, but the actual facilitation, reading a room, adjusting on the fly, coaching through resistance, stays firmly human and becomes more valuable as generic content gets commoditized.
- Regional demand is strong given continuous reskilling pressure across insurance, finance, and services sectors; no major certification barrier exists for internal corporate trainer roles, making this one of the lowest-friction transitions available to you.

Future-proof skills

- Your ability to translate an abstract skills gap into a concrete, human-level fix (the onboarding redesign) is exactly the strategic layer AI can't do alone; position yourself as the person who designs the "why" behind training, not just delivers the "what."
- Build light familiarity with AI-authoring tools (e.g. for drafting training materials or scenario simulations) so you're directing the tech, not competing with it.

Steps for Pursuing This Role

- Propose an internal pilot: formally lead a training or onboarding redesign project at your current employer to build a visible portfolio piece under your real title.
- Credential reality: you already hold the Praktijkopleider certification and Coachend Leidinggeven training, which are exactly what Dutch employers look for in this field; no further gating credential is required.
- If you want to test broader freelance/associate trainer work as a bridge, start with a few paid workshop sessions for local businesses or nonprofits (your food bank network is a natural first client) while keeping your day job as the financial anchor.

FROM YOUR CONVERSATION

Gespreksinzichten

What came out of talking it through with your coach. These are the points where something shifted: a pattern you named, a correction you made, or a conclusion the two of you reached together. Your own words shaped the report you have just read.

- Afstand tot de geholpen persoon als verklarend mechanisme. Je voldoening hing niet aan “hoger” of “meer verantwoordelijkheid”, maar aan directe impact op één mens en een oplosbaar probleem, zodra rapportages en beslissingen ertussen kwamen zakte je energie.
- Diagnostisch instinct als rode draad over banen heen. Je sterkste patroon was niet klantenservice op zich, maar precies zien waar een proces iemand breekt en dat punt oplossen, met concrete resultaten zoals onboarding van 10 naar 6 weken, teamtevredenheid bijna +1 punt en twee collega's naar seniorfuncties coachen.
- Informele loopbaancoaching al als bewijs van je richting. Collega's komen bij je met “ik weet niet of dit werk nog bij me past”, niet alleen met operationele vragen, wat laat zien dat je al functioneert als iemand die navigeert en ontwikkelt, niet alleen managet.
- Spanning absorberen, maar niet per se confrontatie vermijden. De coach nuanceerde dat je het gesprek wel aangaat, maar mogelijk later dan nodig, nadat je al veel spanning hebt opgevangen, en dat de oplossing eerder ligt in eerder grenzen trekken dan in “beter uitleggen”.
- Parttime werkt pas als je ook nee leert zeggen. Minder uren lossen het patroon niet op als je in 32 uur nog steeds overal ja op zegt, de uitputting verschuift dan alleen, dus parttime is pas echt beschermend met een vroege grenzetvaardigheid erbij.
- Woensdag thuis als harde voorwaarde, niet als voorkeur. Je maakte expliciet dat je woensdag thuis zolang de kinderen op de basisschool zitten heilig is, en dat werd vastgelegd als een niet-onderhandelbare randvoorwaarde voor elke volgende stap.
- Trainer Klantenservice als directe herpositionering, geen omscholing. De coach legde uit dat je al het werk doet dat deze rol vraagt, onboarding herontwerpen, 1-op-1 coachen, opnames beoordelen, en dat de stap vooral een titelkloof is, met alleen bewijs verzamelen voor je trainingsfilosofie als slimme versterking.
- Realiteitscheck bij coachende rollen: vroeg aanspreken is de echte groeispier. Je worsteling met iemand aanspreken die na zes weken nog niet meekomt werd benoemd als precies de spanning waar je in deze rol tegenaan loopt, niet als reden om af te haken maar als oefenterrein voor je conflicttolerantie.
- Loopbaanbegeleider en trainersrol als twee verschillende drempels. Voor loopbaanbegeleider bleek een post-HBO certificaat van 6 tot 12 maanden de echte externe eis, terwijl trainer/opleider juist al binnen bereik ligt door je bestaande Praktijkopleider-certificaat en herontworpen onboarding, dus die route is veel dichterbij dan je dacht.

THAT IS THE REPORT

You know where you stand.

Revisit this report whenever you need to. You can also share it with mentors, a career advisor, or anyone else who can support your next steps.

ALSO ON YOUR ACCOUNT

Three tools, and your money back

Your assessment comes with a toolkit that opens up as you invite people. Every friend who joins gets 25% off, and each one you bring advances you one step:

-  Find Job Openings 1 friend
Search live job openings matched to your top career recommendations.
-  Tailor Your Resume 2 friends
Rewrite your uploaded resume to fit the specific jobs you want to apply for.
-  Tailor Cover Letters 3 friends
Generate a tailored cover letter for each role, written to the specific posting.
-  25% refund 4 friends
Get a quarter of what you paid back to your card.
-  Additional 25% refund 5 friends
Another quarter back — now half your purchase recovered.
-  Remaining 50% refund 6 friends
The final half back. Your assessment is now completely free.

Six friends and the assessment has cost you nothing. Refunds go back to the card you paid with.

Everything lives on your dashboard at cairnly.io/dashboard